Because of the growing interest in the proposal for a United States of Europe, The Christian Science Monitor has arranged for a series of articles on the subject from the pen of a competent observer. The articles cover many phases of the subject and provide the ground-work for an understanding of the reasons for the appearance and power of the whole movement. The sixth article appears below.

Abolition of Submarines Favored in British Invitation to Powers

The invitations by Great Britain to the four naval powers to attend a conference in London next January have now been received by the respective governments. At least in Paris and Tokyo, the contents of the invitation have been partially made public. Various points of agreement, it is stated have been reached by the United States and Great Britain. The two principal of these are, first that Anglo-American parity as regards all classes of ships shall have been reached by the end of 1936 and econdly that the submarine shall be abolished, subject to agreement with other naval powers.

LONDON (A)-Great Britain's invitations to the four other major naval powers of the world for a five-power naval disarmament conference are on their way to Washington, Tokyo, Paris and Rome.

The invitations requested the powers to send delegates to London in January, expressing the hope that a great international understanding will ensue from the conference and Street. explaining the situation arising from the conversations between the British Prime Minister, Ramsay Macnald and President Hoover. They bore the signature of the Foreign Secretary, Arthur Henderson.

In the case of the United States Ambassador, Gen. Charles G. Dawes, a covering letter accompanied the invitation. It is understood that the text of the invitation and the letter make a long document, composed of several foolscap pages.

Details of these will be issued for publication on Oct. 8. It is con-sidered too early as yet to give details of any of the practical arrange-ments for bringing together the representatives of the powers. But, in general, the conference will be a formal gathering of two or three dele-gates from each country, with staffs including experts and secretaries The work is expected to continue for a month.

The invitations explained that an Anglo-American agreement would not in any sense be an alliance between the Anglo-Saxon powers, but a united attempt to remove their differences, which had been blocking the progress toward general disarma-

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR NEW YORK-Manhattan, habitat of Skyscraper Americanus, now has its own "building-of-the-month" club.
There is no membership fee and no formal organization. The trick is merely to guess which proposed building on Manhattan is the tallest.

Today's guess may be wrong tomor-

For years the Woolworth Building dominated the Gotham skyline and proudly bore the title of the world's tallest. Then the Chrysler Building pushed its tower to a height of 808 feet and captured the title by a 16-foot margin. Numerous plans were made for structures even taller. Buildings—on paper—shot up to heights of 900 feet.

Then came the announcement of the City Bank and Farmers' Trust Company for a 925-foot structure, to be built in the financial district. The "building-of-the-month" c'ub thought it could take a vacation. But A. E. Lefcourt, builder of many New York skyscrapers, almost immediately announced a scheme for a 1050-foo structure on Broadway at Forty-ninth

President and Premier See

London Parley as One

Step in Efforts

in State Banquet SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU WASHNGTON-Beyond the horizon of the forthcoming London naval conference there unfolds to President Hoover and the British Premier, Ramsay MacDonald, an even greater disarmament vista.

They see the London conference as a quickening of the whole movement for general disarmament, as the foundation for renewal of a mighty endeavor to slash armament and military establishments not only on the seas but on land and in the air. To them, word comes from an au-thoritative source, the London conference to curtail naval armament is but one step in the attainment of the greater ideal they are in agreement on, furtherance of the cause of gen-eral disarmament throughout Europe and the world.

This subject, it was declared, has overshadowed all others in the dis-cussions of the two national executives. Many topics were talked over between them, it was stated, but the problem of building a new basis for disarmament received greatest emphasis. Mr. MacDonald particularly adverted to this topic, it is understood.

The high lights of his views as reported, and with which it is understood Mr. Hoover was in agreement Plan for Disarmament

That the results of the London naval conference must be only the beginning of a general plan for dis-armament. That Europe is disheartarmament. That Europe is disheartened over the many disarmament attempts and only the freshness, enthusiasm and power of the United States can rekindle Europe's hopes for peace and relief from evermounting armament.

That in this general disarmament plan the United States must lead side by side with Great Britain or it will fail. The United States has the power to make or break any general disarmament plan.

That while the United States and Great Britain act in concert in this great movement there must be no alliance or suspicions of an entente between the two English-speaking nations. That in order to guard against this, the results of the Hoover-MacDonald conversations should be thoroughly communicated to the other powers.

That Great Britain must necessarily be strongly influenced in its capacity to cut armament by what the French and Italians do, and to a lesser extent by that of the Japanese in the Far Fast

Therefore, in order that there be no suspicion of a secret alliance or purpose between the United States

This issue was strenuously debated at the recent session of the Council of the League.

Likewise, it is understood, Mr. MacDonald has stressed the importance to Great Britain of French and Italian naval reduction. This does not mean, it was declared, that should France and Italy fail to join in a final naval pact that an Anglo-American-Japanese agreement would not result. In fact, authoritative quarters among both the British and Americans are emphatic in asserting that the gains and understanding they have reached among themselves will not be lost, regardless of what the other two powers do.

United States Not Chief Rival Mr. MacDonald in public declara-tions has made it clear that England is not engaging in the London con-ference with the idea that the United States is its chief naval rival; in fact quite the contrary.

But necessarily if France and Italy

do not come into a naval understanding then such an agreement would have to be made subject to the in-crease or decrease of the Franco-Italian building programs.

The Prime Minister believes, it is declared, that he represents the view of every Englishman in saying that there is not the slightest disposition in England to narrow the 3000 miles of the Atlantic Ocean which separate the two countries for any purpose of rivalry. But he does believe, it was stated, that the two Anglo-Saxon countries are coming ever closer together in the greater field of the "work of the world," the advance. ment of the cause of peace, under-standing and disarmament not only Acceptance by the United States and Japan is regarded as a certainty The Japanese will have more than the three months notice officials in leaders completed the round of social Tokyo indicated they desired before the gathering of the delegates at the limitation of cruisers, submarines and destroyers, but also a further holiday in construction of capital ships.

Whether France and Italy will ac cept without reservations was a subject for speculation in some official quarters here. They declined to take part in the disrupted 1927 conference on the ground this was a matter for the League of Nations. However, since the League's Preparatory Commission on Disarmament has referred the naval question to the principal powers, that reason is regarded by some as being removed in the present instance.

After the formal acceptance of the invitation, President Hoover will give attention to the selection of the American delegation to the London parley. This probably will consist of three delegates in addition to the staff of naval experts, which is expected to be headed by Rear Admiral Hilary P. Jones.

The general belief is that Mr. Stimson will head the American delega-tion, with Hugh S. Gibson, American of Mrs. Edward E. DOMINIONS JOIN LONDON PARLEY ON COMMERCE

Revision of Merchant Shipping Act to Be Discussed in Empire Conference

BY RADIO FROM MONITOR BUREAU LONDON-An interdominions conference to explore the whole question of legislation and merchant shipping regulations affecting the British Commonwealth of Nations as a whole has been opened here, the Dominions Secretary of State, Lord Passfield,

The British representatives include the president of the Board of Trade, William Graham, and the Attorney-General, Sir William Jowitt.

The Canadian delegates are headed by the Minister of Justice, Ernest Lapointe, assisted by the Undersecre-tary of Internal Affairs, Dr. O. D. Skelton, the assistant deputy Minister of Marine, E. Hawken, and others. Australians are represented by Sir William Harrison Moore and Maj. R. G. G. Casey. New Zealand delegates are the High Commissioner, Sir J. Parr and S. G. Raymond. South Africa's spokesmen are the ex-Minister of Mines and Industries, F. W. Beyers, also the Secretary of External Affairs, Dr. H. D. J. Bodenstein and the legal adviser, F. P. Van Den

The Irish Free State is represented by the Minister of External Affairs, P. McGilligan, also by the Attorney-General, J. Costello, and others. In-dia is represented by Sir Muhammad Habibullah, Sir F. M. D. Chamier and Questions under discussion include existing restrictions on dominion legislation and the competence of extraterritorial operation.

The question of the right of a dominion to amend its own consti-tution is also to be considered. And the question is to be explored of the system embodied or implied in the Colonial Laws Validity Act of 1865 and the extent to which provisions of that act should be repealed, amended or modified in the light of relations between members of the British Commonwealth of Nations as defined in the report of the commit-tee on inter-imperial relations, which was adopted by the Imperial Confer-

It was quite out of the question to remain in camp without occupying the castle, for in case it was still garrisoned by brigands they could easily attack our camp. In the early morning the leader of the expedition decided to reconnoiter the fortress, and the expedition convoy received orders to keep ready for the advance. The men, who were dominating the fortress were crowned with watchtowers, each of which had probably a small garrison of its own.

Outside the fortress numerous stone fireplaces made it clear that during the days of Ten-pei Tal-tsen the castle was surrounded by a huge nomad city of several thousand tents. In the very heart of the black stone desert this Mongol ledaer had erected a stronghold, which even now fills the hearts of Mongols and Tibetans

Peaceful Visit From Brigands

We found the castle empty, prob-ably deserted several days before our passage. Its former occupants had moved into neighboring hills. Toward the evening of the same day some of them rode up to our camp, but did not try to attack us or to drive away our camels. They all wore shaggy coats and fur caps or blue handker chiefs tied round the head. All of them were well mounted. After a brief visit, they whirled away in a cloud of dust. Ten-pei Jal-tsen himself is still a great and sacred memory among the nomads of Mongolia. In our expedition caravan, we had a Torgut from the Etsin-gol, who had spent several years in the region of Ma-tzu shan. One day I heard him singing about Ten-pei Jal-tsen. I asked him to re-peat the words of the song, but he refused to do so, and said that he knew no songs about the great leader. All my attempts to induce him to sing proved vain; the man only laughed. As it was his turn to guard on the Roerich Expedition, it shart give a detailed account of his life, but here I shall limit myself to a description of his castle, built in the scription of his castle, built in th scription of his castle, built in the very heart of the Mongolian Gobi. The last years of his life, Ten-pei Jal-tsen spent in the desert. We were the first foreigners to visit his abandoned castle.

GOOD OUTLOOK FOR W. S. C. TEAM

Football Eleven to Travel Over 13,000 Miles to Play Schedule

ECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR PULLMAN, Wash .- Marking the PULLMAN, Wash.—Marking the thirty-fifth year of competition on the gridiron, the State College of Wash-ington football team has embarked this season on the record schedule of its history. In all, 12 games are listed inluding six Pacific Coast Conference ontests and six non-Conference tilts. week while two additional tussless are scheduled for the Christmas holidays in the Hawaiian Islahds. A total of 13,688 miles over land and sea will be traveled by the W. S. C. gridmen in their challenge to the football world and the 1929 football traveling championship. in the Hawaiian Islahds. A total of 13,688 miles over land and sea will be traveled by the W. S. C. gridmen in their challenge to the football world and the 1929 football traveling championship. It is by far the longest distance to be traveled by any Pacific Coast Conference team this fall.

Heading the Washington State grid destinies is Coach Orin E. Hollingbery, who is in his fourth year at Pullman. Although not a college man, Hollingbery has had fair success with the Cougars and achieved fame when be coached the Olympic Club of San Francisco before coming here. Twice he has placed W. S. C. in the first division of the Conference and his first year he won the northwest title. In 26 games played by Washington State under the direction of Hollingbery, the Cougars have won 17, lost seven and tied two. Now with the Hollingbery system well-imbedded in the Pullman students of football, it can be reasonably expected that a strong team will be turned out this season.

most elean by graduation, while last year's ball-toters had thinned considerably. A fair amount of talent was available for the backfield and the main need was reorganization and development in a new combination of players. The tackle situation is still a big problem that will not be solved for some time yet.

In their first game of the season the Washington State players smashed their way to a 48-to-0 victory over the College of Idaho of Caldwell, Ida. It was only a practice game for the Cougars against a much lighter team, but it did show that they have the potentialities for a powerful organization. Virtually the entire squad was given a thorough workout. Now with the College of Idaho game and the contest with Mount St. Charles College of Helena, Mont. (W. S. C. 38, Mount St. Charles 0), behind them, the Washington State footballers are ready for the initial Pacific Coast Conference game with the University of California at Berkeley Oct. 12, Last year the Californias blocked six punts to beat W. S. C., 13 to 3, in a thrilling contest.

Only one letterman returned for the tackle posts. He is Harold A. Ahlskog '31, an alternate of last year. Ahlskog and two sophomores show the best prospects for regular positions. Glen N. Edwards '32 and George F. Hurley prospects for regular positions. Glen N. Edwards '32 and George F. Hurley '32, are mainstays of the 1928 freshman, who appear headed for varsity positions. Both are right around 200 pounds and are particularly aggressive. Either one will fit readily into Hollingbery's scheme of things Other tackle candidates are Kenneth K. Bickelhaupt '32; Frank R. Dungan '30; William N. Goodwin '31; Harry T. Cost '31; Ralph L. Waller '30; Kenneth M. West '32; and Everett R. Jensen '30.

Reserve Strength Lacking

At the present writing it appears that a strong first team lineup will represent Washington State, with the treserve strength rather lacking. The two big problems confronting Coach Hollingbery at the start of the season were the tackle and backfield situations. BRITISH LIQUOR BOARD LOOKS TO 4-YEAR TASK

Will Begin in October With Evidence Against Brewers and Night Clubs

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU LONDON-The British Royal Commission, headed by Lord Amulree "to inquire into the working of the laws relating to the supply and sale of intoxicating liquors," will begin what may prove to be a three or four-year task in October.

Hearing evidence for and against the breweries, distilleries, public houses, and night clubs will begin, it is expected, soon after J. Robert Clynes, the Home Secretary, an-nounces the completion of the inquisitorial body.

Arthur Henderson, Foreign Secretary, is believed to have voiced the opinion of the ManDaraka College the pinion of the MacDonald Cabinet in letter to Trade Union Congress delegates who were recently entertained in Belfast by the National Temperance League.

"I am not sure whether in recent years temperance reformers have not concentrated an excessive amount of attention upon the politi-cal aspect of the liquor traffic and have tended somewhat to neglect the equally important aspect of personal example and appeal," said Mr. Hen-

Temperance stalwarts of the Liberal Party-which in recent years has been more vocal in its demand for drink reform than either the Labor or Conservative Parties—have been disappointed in the personnel of the Royal Commission so far announced. They regret that so far the strong "local veto" view, which has the general support of the Liberals, is not represented, while the so-called "moderates" and "state purchase" advocates have very full rep-

Three names are yet to be an-nounced before the commission is completed, and of these, it is understood, one will be a representative of the medical fraternity and another of the restaurant trade. The Liberals, who last year conducted an inquiry into the drink evil that yielded much valuable statistical and other information, naturally wonder whether a Liberal Temperance Alliance will be included as the third.

The Small Investor's Dilemma THE WAY OUT

Broadly speaking, the person with a small sum of money to invest is faced with three alternatives. He can play for complete safety and content himself with a beggarly dividend. He can take the other extreme and speculate. Or he can go in for one of those popular semi-gilt-edged propositions which return him rather more than, say, 5 per cent, but involves him in a slight risk.

The question is whether the small investor can afford to take any risk. He is not like the large investor who has his irons in many fires. He cannot spread his risks. If he loses, he loses his all. And for what? For an additional one or two per cent! It is the old story of the small man's disadvantage. You see it in every branch of, business. Consider the small shopkeeper—He cannot buy his goods with the same advantage as the multiple traders because he deals in smaller quantities. But consider also what this same small shopkeeper has done in many trades. He has combined with his fellows and commenced buying co-operatively.

THE POWER OF CO-OPERATION THE POWER OF CO-OPERATION

This is precisely what many small investors are doing in another way. They are combining. Five years ago there was formed the First Co-operative Investment Trust. The money of all members was pooled. Thus did a stroke of organisation place each member in the position of the wealthy investor who can protect himself by spreading his risks. The fund that represented their combined resources was distributed over hundreds of different investments by a board of experts and was able to earn a higher rate of dividend with safety than any individual member could have commanded with equal safety if investing on his own. A Second and Third Co-operative Investment Trust followed the First, and now there is a Fourth. These Trusts have no less than 40,000 members, whose combined capital amounts to more than £3,000,000. This is spread over 700 investments in 37 different countries.

OPEN TO ALL OPEN TO ALL

OPEN TO ALL

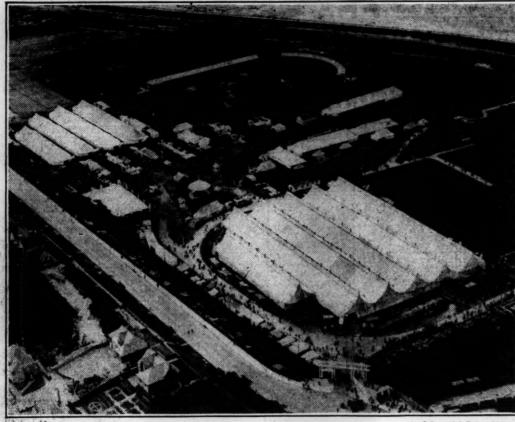

There was never a more practical encouragement to thrift. The ordinary shares at 2/- each now available in the Fourth Coperative Investment Trust pay a dividend of 6%. The Chairman is Alderman A. Emil Davies, L.C.C., who is assisted by a highly expert board. The Trust is registered under the Industrial and Provident Society Acts, and no member may hold more than £ 200 nominal value in it. Under the terms of these Acts the accounts must be audited every year by a Public Auditor appointed by H. M. Commissioner of Treasury, so that the interests of members are the subject of Government supervision.

Those who would like to know more should post the enquiry form here. They will then receive all the information they need.

The casual visitor to Bolton today meets usually a gray sky and a vermilions, and dimities; and of the vigorous wind which sweeps down from the surrounding moors and throws up the dust round the corners of low and narrow streets. He is conscious of tramcars, and cobbles and the clatter of clogs, and of an atmosphere of activity and business and early hours and thrifty living; it s these things which are really at the heart of Lancashire.

The town lies some 11 miles northwest of Manchester, and is sur-rounded by a circle of other towns, Bury, Wigan, Chorley, and others-each one a separate center of industry, but all joined together in the one great cotton interest.

The pamphlet is crammed full with hints and suggestions for the effective teaching of the subject. Even for little children the subject can be made quite an educational asset: As the pamphlet points out, any normal child eight or nine years old can grasp the conception of the nations joining together for a common purpose, for the peaceful settlement of disputes and the avoidance of war, and also for united effort to achieve social and economic progress. The idea that the League stands for team work as opposed to isolated action is one which will readily be appreciated

College of Evanston. Following a research into children's interests con-ducted with tests of 50,000 school children, Miss Baker has discovered that children really care very little for poetry.

The child's indifference to verse may be attributed to several causes. according to Miss Baker. For instance, there are the "memory gems," selections which the child is required to memorize often regardless of whether he understands or enjoys them. Naturally, the child dislikes a meaningless jumble of words which not been taught to form thought pic-

Best loved by children of all the poets is James Whitcomb Riley, whose "Raggedy Man" and "Little Orphan Annie" always provoke laughter. Longfellow continues to be a great favorite, but Stevenson is losing childish favor because his verse deals largely with the imaginative wanderings of a lonely child. Modern youngsters prefer the sprightly activities of A. A. Milne's Christopher Robin. They also like the verse of Walter de la Mare, Dorothy Aldis, and Eugene Field.

During the course of the investigation, children revealed the types of poems they liked best. JOMANCE is not dead. It comes to you

How you have wished you could give it expression—that you might wrap its golden radiance around you, and forget the cares of the day. If only you could play it out in music, just as it comes to you in those silent quiet hours, alone.

You can! With the touch of your fingers you can summon romance when you will. In singing tones and throbbing harmonies, on your favorite instrument, you can create a mood of fragrant moonlight in an old garden—the splash of starry waters in a gondola—the serenade of a lover beneath a balcony-the ecstasy of love itself. Romance is yours when you want it, because it is so easy for you to learn to play. Romance is yours, because a great artistic institution, the U. S. School of Music, has created a modern way to learn music at home, that is as simple as ABC. There are no teachers. Your lessons come to you in printed words and pictures. They are always there to guide you. You work at them when you find time—as often as you can. Each step is made delightfully clear, and you begin to see that playing is not the complicated and difficult thing you always thought it was. You go on step by step-and very soon you find yourself playing the pieces that bring romance, dreams, as only you can express the romance, the dreams that are yours. What a wonderful thing this great school of music offers you. What richness of romance it has given so many thousands of others. And for how little-for the cost of a complete course is only a few cents a day—and the happiness it brings is priceless.

There are graduates of this course who, before they began, felt as you feel now. Some were very young-some very old. All of them wondered whether it was really possible that they could learn to play this different simple way. Now they have discovered a richer, fuller emotional life. They have beauty to give their friends, and they have found new friends because of it. Some are playing in public, some are teaching-and they are earning money at this happiest of work. To read their let-

Touchstones of the Novelist's Art

THATEVER we may decide ments of character and action that first rank of English novelists we character and that of incident, "There can have no doubt of his supreme are bad novels and good novels, as place as an interpreter of his art. Is there are bad pictures and good picthe because his own fiction is so involved and confessedly difficult that his essay on the novel has not become the criterion with which all other discussions of fiction are nature. She had good pictures and good pictures; but that is the only distinction on the South has its golden glory and the West holds the sunset's glow; And the South has its flower-filled valleys where the perfumed breezes blow.

From the East to the West I wandered, yet off at the sweet day's close of the criterion are nature. other discussions of fiction are naturally compared? In the academic world, it is true, his analysis is well Henry James is making more than a world, it is true, his analysis is well known. Among critics outside, however, it enjoys apparently little renown. Yet I return to it with regularity and ever fresh enjoyment. Without disparaging any of the nu-merous and often suggestive appre-The novelist competes with his merous and often suggestive appreications of the novel at the present time, I still find in it the touchstones of my own understanding of the literary genre which has shown such rich and even bewildering growth within a century.

The novelist competes with his brother the painter in his attempt to render the look of things, the look that conveys their meaning, to catch the color, the relief, the expression, the surface, the substance of the human spectagle." So completely do-

within a century.

The distinguished novelist is modest and even diffident in approaching so large a subject at a time when any discussion of the novel was in of being without rearrangement, as its very earliest stages. It is hard for it catches "the very note and trick, us to realize that criticism had not yet brought fiction into its domain less than fifty years ago. But as recently as 1884 when James's article appeared he had the opportunity of and exquisite correspondence" with charting the territory of the novel as a critical prospector. And anyone who so much as glances at the essay will see how brilliantly he realized the opportunity that was his. One can see how completely he founded the whole structure of his analysis upon the soundest traditions of criticism in general, and how at the same time he insisted upon the most liberal scope for an art which was still discovering itself.

His fundamental contention reads like a paraphrase of Aristotle's primary law: the plot is everything. For him "every word and every punctuation point must contribute directly ... to this sense of the directly that the house is an experience only." Of what use is an experience only." Of what use is an experience which is not imaginatively at least both "immense and exquisite"? Therefore he adds the suggestive injunction, "Try to be one of the people on whom nothing is lost." That is, through the imagination. What the novelist must possess is "the power to guess the unplication of things, to judge the whole piece by the pattern, the condition of feeling life in general so completely that you are well on your way to knowing any particular corcharting the territory of the novel human life makes the greatest de-

"What is character but the determination of incident? What is incident but the determination of incident? What is incident but the determination of incident? What is incident but the incident? What is incident but the conduct of a certain group of people illustration of character? By his emphasis upon to remote circumferences. this interdependence we are some what prepared for his striking pic-ture of the seamless fabric which he demands of "any novel worth discussing at all." Description, he declares, must be in its intention nar-rative, dialogue must be essentially descriptive. "A novel is a living thing, all one and continuous, like tion as it lives will it be found, I think, that in each of the parts there is something of each of the other parts." In Looking on the Happy Autumn Fields

Ah, happy fields, at rest from fruitfulness! No careless storm of the ungentle Spring Uptore your venturing roots, nor pierced the sting Of spiteful frost your early promises. The skies were blue above you. With caress Of gentlest beams the sun lured you to bring Your blushing blossoms forth; and from the wing Of night were shaken dews their thirst to bless. For shadows had ye yet but the bounteous clouds That, passing, spanned you with the arch of hope.... And now the focund harvesters have blest you. Ye happy fields, that from your labors rest you.

As a little girl Mary Servoss, who is descended from "good old New England stock," found a charm in grandmother things-the old fourposter beds and flowery patchwork quilts, the quaint china, prim candlesticks with glass bobeches, and all that went to produce the homelike atmosphere of houses in colonial, Revolutionary and post-revolutionary days. Gradually Miss Servoss became fascinated with the old homsteads scattered throughout New England which had een abandoned and left to ruin. She delights to delve into their past and discover the origin of each par-ular home. She tries to find the the building of that type of house, its setting, its outlook and immediate

Made a Political Isspe

While this barrage of publicity was slowly arousing public consciousness, Mme. Khayatt used her influence as a leader of society to induce men and women to assemble for discussion of ways and means to combat the drug menace. Under her patronage bazaars and fêtes were held to raise funds, and when, as a matter of policy and custom, political leaders attended, they were invited to counsel upon an rinally, after prolonged agitation and publicity had forced this issue to the front of public affairs, Mme. Khayatt and her colleagues drew up a proposal that new laws against drug dealers be enacted, and presented it to the Prime Minister. Parliament took up the issue, and after swinging back and forth through the channels of legislative procedure, a new law was enacted in 1927, which decrees that drug smugglers be fined 100 Egyptian pounds ($5000) and sentenced to prison from two to five years. Moreover, this law included a provision that drug addicts be confined to a reformatory for a period ranging from one month to three

STOCKS RISE BUOYANTLY TO 41GHER LEVEL

Early Irregularity Followed by Steady Upward Movement

NEW YORK (A)-Stock prices ralled for the third successive day today, response to a further easing of redit conditions and favorable trade

A wave of selling swept over the eent yesterday and a high of 5 to 5 a last week.

Early irregularity in the market was attributed to predictions that the Federal Reresve brokers' loan statement, to be issued after the close on Thursday would not show the generally expected huge decrease in borrowings. These predictions were based on the fact that the loans of some of the leading houses were down only 1 or 2 per cent below the levels of a week ago. This was offset, however, by resports of a substantial decrease in member bank borrowings at the Federal Reserve.

NEW CHAIN STORE SYSTEM NEW CHAIN STORE SYSTEM

LOS ANGELES—That a large and entirely new chain store system to operate on the Pacific coast is being spousored by the Tucker, Hunter, Dulin & Co. group and Goldman Sachs Trading Corporation is indicated by recent developments. Daley's, Inc., operating a large chain store group, is being used as nucleus, Letters liave been addressed to stockholders of Daley's asking deposit of stock to be exchanged for stock in new holding company, to be known as Continental Chain Stores, Inc., on a share-for-share basis, The new company will be closely affiliated with Western Dairy Products Co. which owns California Dairies, Inc., and other dairies comprising a chain running from Seattle to San Diego.

GOOD STRUCTURAL STEEL DEMAND NEW YORK—Structural steel demand continues an important sustaining influence in steel, and while building is generally off, orders for fabricated steel materials are still running ahead of 1928. Although high money rates may have hit certain types of buildings, construction requiring structural steel has increased. On basis of structural awards reported from week to week, which are not entirely complete, orders for nine months totaled some 1,673,000 tons of structural material, compared with 1,448,000 the correspondstructural material, compared with 1. Monthly average was about 186,000 tons this year, compared with 160,000 last year.

CANDY SALES CONTINUE UP

WASHINGTON—Department of Commerce figures show candy sales in the United States during August were $26.174.-201, an increase of 17.4 per cent over total of $22,292,235 for August, 1923, and of 30 per cent over total of $20,168.455 for July, 1929. Greatest percentage of gain was in central states, where 30 per cent increase over last year was shown. For New England, a gain of 12.5 per cent over last year and of 39.7 per cent over July, 1929, was recorded, the large gain over July being due in part to the fact that July sales this year were subnormal as compared with the rest of the country.

SHENANDOAH'S EARNINGS LARGE
Shenandoah Corporation, large investment trust organized last summer by Goldman Sachs Harrison Williams interests, reports profits for the period ending Sept. 30 from sale of securities, cash dividends and interest, and stock dividends taken at their prevailing market values, after deducting interest, expenses and taxes, of $4.424,295. After preferred dividends, this is equal to 61 cents a common share, or at the annual rate of $3.18 a share. On Sept. 30 the companies' holdings, exclusive of Blue Ridge Corporation stock, had appreciated more than $10,000,000 in market value.

INTERSTATE EQUITIES CORPORATION NEW YORK—Bancamerica-Blair Corporation states that Interstate Equities Corporation, investment trust under their management formed about the first of August, is now holding over 90 per cent of its assets in cash. The corporation disposed of a large amount of its holdings at a considerable profit before the start of the recent market decline. Bancamerica-Blair Corporation hold for their own account a considerable block of the common stock of Interstate Equities Corporation. Neither the organizers nor management hold options to purchase common stock, nor is there any management contract whereby a percentage of the profits accrue to the management.

NEW YORK—That activities of United States Rubber Co, have taken a definite turn for the better is indicated by President Davis, who has returned from a month's trip to Europe, "United States Rubber Co," he said, "is beginning to find its stride in the direction of successful and profitable operation. We have outlined a policy of consolidation of various units of our activities, which, when completed, will effect considerable economies all along the line and add materially to earning power."

PRODUCE EXCHANGE SECURITY SALES NEW YORK—Total sales in securities market of New York Produce Exchange for September were 2,524,078 shares, a daily average of approximately 115,000, compared with 1,667,000 in August. Since the opening of this market in December, 1928, 11,191,598 shares have been traded in. Of this total, more than 8,000,000 have been cleared through the Produce Exchange Clearing House, the market value of these clearings being in excess of $216,600,000.

When Reaction Sets In-

It is in periods of reaction that the value of investment counsel becomes most strikingly apparent.

You can easily have the profits of weeks or months wiped out if you have inadvertently become over-extended, have purchased speculative stocks, have accepted unauthoritative advice.

It is the business, and the duty, of an organization such as Brookmire to take every means to prevent these things from interfering with clients' investment progress.

It is dangerous to try to "go it alone".

We have set up comprehensive research facilities, and in every possible way provided a Service which you, as a careful investor, can use to help eliminate the sharp and frequently disastrous set backs, which individuals trying to "go it alone" experience all too frequently. We would like the opportunity of letting you see what this Service is and how you can use it. Without obligation you can secure a copy of our recently prepared "Broader View Program", an outline of Brookmire Service, and our current bulletin on security trends.

The manifesto also says: "The Bank Act of 1844 is still the main charter of our financial legislation, but it does not take into account the vastly altered circumstances which have arisen as a result of the war. Our present more our financial legislation, but it does not take into account the vastly altered circumstances which have arisen as a result of the war. Our present monetary policy is not designed to serve the producing industries. The expense of maintaining a free gold market, a burden which—a high bank rate—is carried by industry, is too great for this country to bear, unless we reconcile ourselves to becoming a second class or a third class industrial power.

"An increase of 1 per cent in the bank rate, if maintained for one year in order to attract foreign short balances, and thus enable the Bank of England to protect or increase its gold reserves, costs alone in financial bank bills, commercial bank advances, treasury bills and foreign balances, some £25,000,000. BUILDING PERMITS

WASHINGTON—In 85 cities having population of 100,000 or over building permits issued in the first half of 1929 were $1,42,106,688, according to the Department of Labor. Of this amount, 64.1 per cent was for residential building. Apartments accounted for the largest part at $353,284,200. Hotels ranked second at $243,345,898, surpassing one-family dwellings at $212,357,870.

COTTON PRICES DECLINE ON BIG CROP PROSPECTS

NEW YORK (P)—The government cotton crop figure of 14,915,000 bales proved larger than generally expected, and after its publication prices de-clined about $1 to $1.25 a bale under clined about $1 to $1.25 a bale under very active liquidation and selling by Wall Street and local operators.

The trade continued to buy on the decline, and this demand was of sufficient volume to hold the market within comparatively narrow limits, although it was thought that the cropindication of nearly 15.000,000 bales might serve to discourage buying incentive from outside sources.

NEW ORLEANS (AP)-The govern-NEW ORLEANS (49)—The government crop report giving the indicated yield as 14,915,000 bales, a moderate increase over a month ago, was somewhat larger than traders expected. As a result, when trading was resumed after the usual recess, prices opened 30 points down on October, 35 points down on December, and 29 to 31 points down on later months.

This was considered only a moderate decline, but the market had well liquidated in advance of the bureau report. Trading was very active fol-lowing the resumption of business.

COTTON CROP OF 14,915,000 BALES IS OFFICIAL FORECAST

WASHINGTON (A)—A cotton crop of 14,915,000 bales this year was fore-cast today by the Department of Agri-cast today by the Department of Agui-culture.

The department said this was indi-cated by the condition of the crop on Oct. 1, which was 55.0 per cent of normal. A month ago production of 14,825,000 bales was indicated on the condition of the crop Sept. 1, which was 55.4 per cent of a normal. Last year's crop totaled 14,478,000 bales, and the condition on Oct. 1 was 54.4 per cent of a normal.

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Census Bureau announced today 5,905,650 run-ning bales of cotton of the growth of 1929, including 169,507 round bales, counted as half bales, had been ginned counted as half bales, had been ginned prior to Oct. 1. J. LOS ANGELES—Understood negotiations are under way whereby General Motors may acquire a site here before would entail expenditure of about $10.000,000 and would include an automobile assembly plant and other plants of General Motors affiliated industries. Indications are that tentative plans call for a minimum of 150 acres and probably 300 ares. Conservative estimate on cost of acquiring such a site is $500,000. Vice. Fresident Settinus of General Motors, accompanied by other executives, is expected here around Nov. 1 to look over the local field.

WHEAT PRODUCTION IN 1929

WASHINGTON—The 1929 wheat production in 30 countries has been reported to the Department of Agriculture at 2.885,246,000 bushels, compared with 3.245,881,000 in 1928. Northwest Grain Dealers' Association of Canada has estimated production in three western provinces at 267,471,000. Returns to Northwestern Grain Dealers' Association to Sept. 26 from 92 per cent of country points in the prairie provinces indicated about 88 per cent of the crop had been threshed. White to play and mate in two NOTES The results of the British Chess

The results of the British Chess Federation Congress recently held at Ramsgate allot victory to a youthful Irdian, M. Sultan Khan. British sportsmanship universally acclaims this feat as a further cementing of Anglo-Indian relations. Yates, previous winner, and Sir George A. Thomas, however, were playing at Carlsbad at the time. The scores:

works of Schumann and of Mendelssohn; but later in Copenhagen he studied under two masters whose natures were stanchly Scandinavian, Ever after that Grieg clung to his Scandinavian traditions, so generally evidenced in his Peer Gynt suite, in the popular piano concerto, in the simple folk songs or in the now somewhat hackneyed Norwegian Bridal Procession. In part through the influence of Grieg, there developed a mighty renaissance of Norwegian national music. The master himself estab-

Communism and the Textile Trade

THE real issue in the southern textile industry is not Communism, but low pay and long hours. Communism, where it exists, is only a by-product. Though public interest at present may center around the trials growing out of shootings and riots in Gastonia-in which the Communist National Textile Workers' Union figured-this is only a minor part of the problem as a whole. The southern textile workers appear to be dissatisfied with their condition, and until this dissatisfaction is allayed the mill hands are likely to seize various weapons which come to hand-even the desperate and deceptive weapon of Communism.

Anyone who visited Gastonia at the height of the recent strike there remembers the almost pathetic ignorance of the workers as to the ulterior purpose of the National Textile Union which they had joined. One union was very much like another to them. This one had a sonorous name. It had been the tradition for decades in southern industry to look askance at all unions, and this view was shared not only by employers but, it is safe to say, by a majority of the employed.

It might be argued that the workers of Gastonia should have investigated the union in which they pledged their economic fate. But how could a majority of them, flocking in families to the mills before dawn, and returning home again after dark, know that it was the United Textile Workers of America-affiliated with the conservative American Federation of Labor-which offered them truly national help, and not the fictitious "National" union, national only in name? Men who work sixty hours a week and receive only $12 or $15 do not buy textbooks on industrial relations.

Into this atmosphere of dissatisfaction the Communists introduced themselves, and the workers in Gastonia lumped all unions as one and accepted the outside leadership, with results disastrous to themselves. The Gastonia strike has utterly failed. In other parts of the South, however, the Federation of Labor union is now undertaking to foster the program of collective bargaining which statesmen and Presidents, including Mr. Hoover, have indorsed.

In some of the recent attacks on the communistic leadership in Gastonia there appears to be an effort to sidetrack this movement and to tar all labor leaders in the South with the same brush. Under an anti-Communist slogan, other individuals are apparently attempting to divert attention from the real issue in the southern textile unrest, which is low wages and long hours. It cannot be too strongly urged that the problem is not one of Communism, or anti-Communism; it is rather whether human beings, who may be young boys and girls, shall labor from sunup to sundown, for mere pit-

This problem cannot be downed by shouting "Radicalism." It is not radicalism to demand an American standard of living. No reasonable man thinks it is, and the reported statement of Governor Gardner of North Carolina, in favor of higher wages throughout the textile industry, shows the view that practical public men in the South are taking. As for Communism-it will never make headway in the United States for a very simple reason. Communism cannot abide prosperity, and the United States is prosperous. One taste of high wages in Gastonia, or elsewhere, will end Communism.

The Case of Friday Street

TIME was when the beauty of a secluded hamlet or lonely lake or o'erhanging mountain crag was left to poets to discover and to enshrine in verse, later to be visited by pilgrims treading reverently in the footsteps of genius. Today every busy city man who feels inclined that way can be his own discoverer of nature's beauties, with the result that the desire to preserve the more picturesque parts of the countryside from inconsiderate or profit-seeking despoilers is growing in proportion to the knowledge and love town dwellers are gaining of rural de-

In England, in particular, the movement to keep certain well-known "beauty spots" from the encroachment of the builder has won wide publicity following the recent attempt of a number of influential London papers to mobilize public opinion for the preservation of Friday Street, a beautiful hamlet in Surrey, about thirty miles from London, consisting of an inn and a few cottages, which, it is generally conceded, is one of the most typical examples of English rural

The agitation for preserving Friday Street is, however, perhaps interesting chiefly because it impinges on the larger problem of the distribution of the population of the London area. The necessity, indeed, of keeping the expansion of London within the limits of a well-defined policy of town planning and development has become apparent lately owing to the extraordinarily rapid growth of industry in the south of England, and particularly in the neighborhood of London, where, according to the recently issued report of the British Chief Inspector of Factories and Workshops, the number of factories has increased during the last eight years by 3000, and the number of factory workers in one South London district alone has grown within the last five years from 60,000 to 150,000.

Proposals for a regional town planning scheme for London have lately been prepared for the consideration of the appropriate Government departments, and one of these, it is interesting to note, contemplates the development of a 'green girdle or chain of open spaces" around London, and the preservation of woodlands and other picturesque pieces of landscape as permanent recreation grounds for the people.

The present campaign for keeping Friday Street unspoiled will surely strengthen the hands of those who would like to see the speedy enactment of the regional town planning

The Statesman, the Man

TT IS a saving grace in international relationships that whenever a statesman leaves his own country and travels on an official mission to another, the heat and dust of internal political strife are left far behind, and nation speaks to nation.

Thus Ramsay MacDonald has been careful to point out during his public appearances in the United States that he represents not one particular group in Great Britain, but the whole people, and it is well known that his chief political opponent, Stanley Baldwin, agrees in all the sanguine aims which prompted the visit. People in the United States have been happy to receive the British Prime Minister as the representative of a united Britain, and are conducting the welcome above the scuffle of politics. The American President, on this occasion too, speaks for a united constituency.

Recognizing, then, that their Prime Minister is more than the leader of the Labor Party, British people of other political faiths may be gratefully appreciative of those qualities of lifelong idealism which have prompted Ramsay MacDonald to put his mission in the United States on such a high moral elevation. Standing in the aldermanic chamber of New York City Hall-scene of so many political embroilments of the less savory kind-Ramsay MacDonald was Scotsman and seer enough

Looking forward into the future we must be inspired by a new faith of fraternity, with a new courage to follow large and stirring moral aims, and supplement all our material achievements by things that belong to the spiritual excellencies of the peoples of the world.

Then, coming close to the hearts of his hearers, "emboldened by their kindness," the Prime Minister continued:

Your skyscrapers can soar high, your millions can mount up to untold numbers, your prosperity may go on by leaps and bounds, but America, most precious of all your possessions, is your own soul. I come here not to advance material interest, but to pledge ourselves; pledge ourselves that our two flags, wherever the work of God is to be done in this world, will be flying side by side, straining our ears to listen to the divine call, ambitious of nothing, competitive in nothing, except which is to be the first

As these words swelled through the aldermanic chamber, and over the invisible waves of the air to all parts of the world, few could resist their inspiring appeal. Ramsay MacDonald had found his way into the heart of America. He had not been afraid to strip away the materialistic shell which so often seems to obscure America in a commercial age, and to see the real America, consecrated, as its citizens love to think, to a lofty ideal.

His were not careless words of oratory, as all who remember a career devoted above all to an ideal will believe. Ramsay MacDonald has tried his ideals in the fire of suffering, and they have come out whole. All are not prepared to go so far. Some do not agree with the ideals. But no one can question his sincerity, or obscure the value of his moral elevation in men's struggle toward that splendid idealpeace on earth and good will toward men.

Chicago's Newest Oldest House

THE oldest house in Chicago has been torn down with disturbing frequency this year. The razing of one old structure naturally passes the title on to another, but now has come a time when no certain heir apparent is in sight. However, this inconsequential perplexity doubtless is only of the moment. Obviously what the city needs is a bronze tablet, "This is our oldest house," which can be hung on one dilapidated domicile, and when it is wrecked, conveniently taken down and tacked up on the next most ancient. A perambulating memorial just now would be very serviceable.

Chicago lost its last evidence of antiquity, remarks Miss Caroline McIlvaine, one of the city's historical authorities, when another relic of its first decade as a city disappeared last month. It was not ninety years old. A lot of old houses are left, it is true, but still there does not seem to be anything really outstanding in the way of most venerable mansions. Quite a few small towns in the middle West could make a better showing of antiques than that. Many New England edifices could pass Chicago in age and throw in an extra 100 or 200 years to boot.

Some day the local historians may figure out the Chicago situation. But if the discovery of primacy is ever made, the historians may take a little lesson from experience. They may refrain from giving their legend the usual touch of finality, and simply make their metal letters read: "Our newest oldest house."

Dr. Stresemann's Successor

THE appointment by the German Chancellor of Dr. Julius Curtius, member of the German People's Party—the party of which Dr. Gustav Stresemann was leader-and Minister of Economics in the present Cabinet, as Minister of Foreign Affairs is naturally welcomed in German political circles which supported Dr. Stresemann's policy. Dr. Curtius is a stanch advocate of his predecessor's political ideas. He worked with him in closest contact at The Hague and is thoroughly acquainted with the complicated ins and outs of the reparation

Germany's chief task now is to help carry out the Young plan, for which Dr. Stresemann paved the way. All his successor has to do is to follow the path mapped out. There is no better man than Dr. Curtius to do this. Since he believes in authority for the Foreign Minister, he is not likely to let outside influences disturb pointed, probably in November. A fundamental change in the Cabinet may take place as soon as the Young plan is ratified and the Government settles down to revise the financial administration of the Reich. In view of this coming financial reorganization, the Right wing of the German People's Party, representing the heavy industries, already is advocating a shift of the whole party to the Right and close co-operation with the Nationalists.

Dr. Stresemann had succeeded in preventing such a weakening of the central group of parties, consisting primarily of the German People's Party, the Roman Catholics, the Democrats and the Bavarian People's Party. Everything, it is believed, should be done to prevent this happening now. The co-operation of that section of the Conservative bourgeoisie and of industry represented by the German People's Party with the liberal parties and the Social Democrats is still regarded as most necessary for the German Republic's stability.

Dad Takes Down the Screens

THIS is the season of the year when the gentle pastime of taking down the screens engages the attention of that man of all work, known as Dad.

It should be quickly noted, however, that the larger part of this indoor sport is a thing of speculation rather than actual performance. For some days Mother has been suggesting that danger of invasion from flies has now departed, along with the summer foliage, and that Saturday afternoon would be an excellent time for Dad to don his overalls and transfer the screens from windows to basement. Dad sighs, with eyes focused upon the golfing green.

Saturday afternoon arrives. Dad confesses he can think of no adequate reason for delay, so determines to do the job speedily and then scurry off to the fairway. He supplies himself with a blunt screw driver, but finds that the screens have stuck so tightly that they need some expert prying. Finally the screens are all down, and most of the grime and dust is transferred to the amateur mechanic's face and Dad gathers a handful of screens, and starts to negotiate the back stairs. One screen misses the turning, and encourages the others to skid. All clatter down upon the stairs, but the handy man grasps the bannister and emerges triumphant. It is too late to play golf, but the screens are in safe hiding until next year.

When Composers Come Home

MERICAN composers who have been prac-A ticing their craft in Europe the last summer, or the last year, may be expected to return home, now that the music season is opening; not all of them, by any means, but many. For in France, Germany and Italy, to mention typical countries, numbers of American men, and a few American women also, are writing symphonies, quartets, piano pieces, songs and other works, with a view to having them performed there first, but brought out ultimately in the United States. They have gone, to begin with, to learn from European masters the technique of composition, and they have gone again to find surroundings favorable to harmonic and contrapuntal thinking. At last, portfolio under arm, they stand on the doorstep of an orchestral director or a chamber-music leader in New York, San Francisco or some city between, asking consideration for their manuscript, or mayhap their published score.

The unknown among them can address themselves to the solicitation more confidently than they could a few years ago, before Howard Hanson at the Eastman School of Music, in Rochester, N. Y., began championing the cause of the American composer. Those who are known need only open out the book and display the notes, to be assured that, far from asking a favor, they are bestowing a compliment. But obscure or famous, they all re-enter their country more or less as importers. The wares which they exhibit so hopefully will have to be regarded, after all, as something else than a native product. The tone poem written and originally produced in Paris can hardly help possessing certain French traits, while the trio composed in Berlin and played there, the ink fresh on the paper, must needs disclose a trace or two of German influ-

New names will soon be spelled out in the program books and leaflets of concert organizations. Old names, if plans have come through as projected a year ago, should include at least two: John Powell and Percy Grainger. Men like them cannot but add to the wealth of existing music, since they have never spent time in vain scribbling. And yet, question arises whether the staves they have been filling during their European sojourn will be an expression truly American or one of mixed national qualities; question whether Carl Ruggles and Henry Cowell, for example, the one writing in New England and the other in California, will not be the more authentic spokesmen of their Nation, strange and wayward though their talents may seem to many. For composers of homespun habit may, in the end, be those whose repute travels the farthest.

School authorities of Albany, N. Y., are going to make the schoolrooms in the lowest grades resemble homes in an attempt to bring the home atmosphere into the schools. Perhaps they are also hoping to get a little more of the school atmosphere into the homes.

Hearts and Hosses

TTE WERE sitting one cool October day in a patch of sunlight in the stable of my friend, Harvest Hunniwell. It was chilly outside where, in the scintillating atmosphere of a northern Maine autumn, the sere leaves of the maples, that had worn such bonny scarlet jackets but a week before, were floating down to the ground. It was good to be alive that singing day, and it was doubly good to sit in the warm rays of the sunbeam where the little motes danced, breathing the fragrance of hay from mountain meadows, and to pass the time in peaceful country converse with my friend. Harvest, who, enthroned in a dilapidated wheelbarrow, was mending an

The conversation rambled hither and you like a boy afield on a summer afternoon, veering from the price of cordwood to the snow that had capped Mt. Bigelow in the night. It was autumn, and our thoughts were upon the coming winter that lay just beyond the mountain range ready to march its ice-clad battalions down the Carrabassett Valley.

To the citizens of Kingtown the approach of winter is signalized by great activity, for Kingtown is a lumber town, and it is when the snow comes and fills in among ing the depressions, packing down into a firm road, that the hardy men of the village and their plump, shaggy horses venture into the silent forest to reap the annual From before Christmas until the first week of March one meets them on the roads, great, round-rumped, arch-necked horses with harnesses trimmed with brass and pendent plumes of scarlet hair, drawing the heavy sledges of rock maple, birch, beech and poplar to the mills, from which they emerge in bags of spools for the

the fallen trees of the woods, covering the rocks and level-spinning mills of the Connecticut Valley, cartons polished broom handles, toys for the children, and the thousand and one wooden utensils and novelties which man has invented for his convenience and pleasure. -Beside the horses stalk the teamsters, rugged yeomen in leather jerkins, or frocks of green or scarlet plaid with black, with moccasined feet, and furred headgear, from which emerge red aquiline noses and frost-rimed beards.

There is something about them that strikes a deep chord on the heartstrings, for they are so picturesque, so "early American" in their dress, and speech, and manner. With the sight of them the mechanical age drops out of sight, and one plunges back to the days of the ax, the log cabin and the forest clearing, of puncheon boards and latchstrings, and self-reliance.

So during the latter part of October the woodchoppers grind their axes, pack up great stores of flour and sugar, and salt pork, and disappear down the forest trails, where the partridge berries gleam amid the reindeer moss. From then until the bountiful dinner of a New England Thanksgiving Day is a happy memory of the past, the teamsters are busy with their gear, waiting for the big snows, to enable them to haul in the fruit of the ringing axes. Harnesses are mended and oiled, sledges repaired, and from dawn to dusk the smithy shop resounds with the clang of steel on steel, and the roar of the forge as the bellows draft the fires, and horses are shod, sledge runners beaten smooth and true, and heavy chains welded link on link.

At last the halter was mended and Harvest settled comfortably back against the front board of the wheelbarrow. Picking up a length of straw, he fell to sucking its sweet-

"Had a talk with that city feller who's workin' up to the big mill; you know, the efficiency engineer who's showing them how to save money by cutting out waste of time and material, an' changing things around." His tone was dry, and I could tell that he did not altogether see eye to eye with the "city feller." "Met him at the post office yestiddy evenin'. I'd been

"'That's a fine pair of hosses, Mr. Hunniwell,' he says." "They are a good pair, even if I do say it, an' it made me feel kinda good around the heart to the city boy for admirin' them.

"'But,' says he, 'you won't see hosses like that outside picture book in less'n ten years.'

"I looked at him kinda hostilelike, for I was raised up up among hosses, an' I'm half brother to them. I jest looked at him steady, and said nothing, waiting for him to explain himself.

"'Tractors,' says he, 'tractors will do it, put 'em clean off the map. Why, they haul ten times the load, and they don't call for expensive feedin', and they don't take any care. No groomin', feedin', nor waterin', and no stiff harnesses to buckle with half-frozen fingers, an' no bits to warm up in a halfst of het reter each mornin'." warm up in a bucket of hot water on a zero mornin'.'

"It was a displeasin' conversation to me, except for one coint, where he mentioned warmin' the bits in hot water. Then I saw he really was an efficiency expert in spite of his airyish city ways, for he knew better'n to put a cold bit in a hoss's mouth when the mercury was down. "He went on for quite some time about the efficiency of tractors, explaining the fine points of their economy, an' all o' that. I leant up agin the off rear wheel pretending to listen, but I was thinkin' different thoughts. I've been. up to Jerusalem Plantation and seen the newfangled tractor log haulers those New York City folks are usin'to bring the logs into the ply-wood factory.

"I rode on one once—an' once for all. A slam-bangin', evil-smellin' iron thing as cantankerous as a broncho and as friendly as a runaway dynamo. It went whammin' down the slopes of Mt. Bigelow like an express engine off the tracks, haulin' two big sledge loads of logs as though they were children's toys on a piece of string. I sat by the driver, he all splashed to the eyes with oil and such like, me hangin' on like sixty figgerin' how if I got shucked I could aim myself at a nice soft snowdrift, my ears splitting with the drum fire of the engine, an' my throat raw with burnt gasoline "And I thought of Dan and Dinah. I raised them up from colts, as you know, little black critters with legs like a gi-raffe and the pinkest tongues you ever saw when they lapped the sugar from my hand. Fifteen year now, colt and hoss, they an' me have been haulin' logs in wintertime on these Kingtown hills. I set on the sledge, my hands jest holdin' the reins out-a habit, for that team don't need drivin'. Steady, an' patient, and sensible they plow breast deep in new snow, an' rest on the upgrades, and on the steep ram-downs they races along before the load like a pair of Kentucky blue-grass mares.

"When I load up they hang their heads and relax all over, breathin' deep to get their strength, but when I get the last log on they snap right up, every muscle taut as steel an' their eyes as bright as diamond points. They settle their necks snug into the collars, and we're off again, steady, an' sure, an' peaceful, with the smell of pine, an spruce, an' hemlock, an' sweet, clean hosses in the frosty air, and that heart-warmin' feeling of sympathy that comes between man and hoss.

"When the city boy had done I smiled kindly, for he's a likable, enthusiastic feller, an' I asked him how his wife was, an' he says fine, an' we talked of the weather awhile. and then I turned to go. I climbed into the wagon an' took up the lines, an' Dan he looked at Dinah, and Dinah she looked at Dan, an' they both turned their heads inward an' looked down the pole at me and kinda snickered a little, an' then they walks off kinda slow like.

"That city feller had plumb tickled them with his airyish ways. But—they knew me; yissah, they knew me.
"For as long as Dan and Dinah can lift a hoof, an' as long as I can hold a rein, we stick, an' stick closer'n bark to a birch!' Harvest threw up his arms and stretched, a great yawning, honest, country stretch, and then added:

"Efficiency, I cal'late is a great thing, a great thing in the right place; but when you try to apply it to the affinity between hearts and hosses—well, it jest don't work."

TEW motoring rules have been issued for this country, and one of the principal provisions is that all traffic on the national roads is to be given right of way. These "routes nationales" appear on maps as thick red lines and are marked "N. 6" or "N. 27" as the case may be, indicating the route nationale number six, or twentyseven. Guidebooks explain these numbers, and motoring here is much facilitated by choosing your route and following it according to the road numbers, which appear also on the kilometer stones. Anyone, therefore, on a route nationale does not need to bother about cross traffic from a branch road. The new regulations are also stricter about brakes and headlights, and call for all bicycles to be equipped shortly with rear lights.

L'Illustration has published another supplement of modern French verse, and in this number the fact is recalled that it was Gustave Kahn who "originated free verse in France about the year 1880." There is, however, judging from this issue, little "vers libre" today in comparison with more classic forms. A small example, nevertheless, occurs among the poems of a gentle writer of lighter vein, Tristan Klingsor, which runs:

L'épine est en fleur; Quel est donc cet oiseau qui chante ainsi là-bas Dans le bois; L'épine est en fleur; Quel est donc cet oiseau qui chante dans mon cœur?

The thorn is in flower; What is then this bird which is thus singing down there In the wood; The thorn is in flower; What is then this bird which sings in my heart?

Archibald has been to Paris. This was learned from his friend, Byers Fletcher, because Archibald would never have thought of bringing himself in any way before public attention. Nevertheless, it is possible that the extraordinary happenings which overtook Archibald in a motor tour on the Continent may all be fully revealed to the readers of the Monitor. We understand this to be the case, for Mr. Fletcher agrees that what happened to Archibald is far too unusual to remain unknown-which, undoubtedly, Archibald in his own heart would much prefer. If you want to be let in the secret, watch carefully

Flower beds in the parks of Paris are islands of color in smooth green seas of lawn. A feature this year has been the mixture of high and low plant or flower, and the wide range of geraniums. The beds are often set out in a single mass of one tone, and then time and time again this oval of scarlet will be broken by a handful of grasses growing here and there among the geranium, or a few silver-leafed gum trees, or caladium. The same idea was also used with other flowers. For example, gladioli were interspersed among a low bed of plants with green leaves, or cannas of bright red were stepped out among a mass of purple flowers. Of all seen, perhaps that bed with the wild grasses

The University of Paris is the largest in Europe, according to a statement issued by Comité d'Action Economique et Douanière. The proportion of foreign students must also be easily the largest on this Continent, for at the last census reported by this body there were 14,700 foreign students among the total enrollment of 26,100. Scholarships are granted to more than 1000 foreign students. The character of this ancient seat of learning has, of course, always been conspicuously international ever Daily News and Westminster Gazette.

since the Middle Ages, when different countries erected colleges here for students at the university. It was then that the common tongue was Latin, from which the nomenclature, "Latin Quarter," has arisen for the district about the Sorbonne. . . .

It sounds perfectly delightful. An opera has been written by Jacques Ibert called "Le Roi d'Yvetot." It has for its central figure a man

Little known in history, Who rose late and went to bed early, Sleeping quite well without glory.

Yvetot is a manufacturing town near Rouen which once -from the fourteenth to the sixteenth centuries-had among its inhabitants certain who were possessors of what was known as "franc-alleu," that is, they were exempted from servitude of any sort. These took the title of king, and it is one of these whom M. Ibert has singled out. The famous chansonnier of the last century, Pierre Jean Béranger, sang of the soi-disant kings of Yvetot in playful

A strolling reminder of Louis XII, who reigned in France at the beginning of the sixteenth century, was encountered the other day in the Forest of Marly. The great beech woods were silent under a warm afternoon sun, and a dale was deep in cool shadow. A small object appeared moving over the moss and twigs, and it proved to be an adventurous young hedgehog. The little fellow moved slowly along, pausing when he heard footsteps, and standing still with his eyes firmly shut while his bristly back was being stroked. The hedgehog was the badge of Louis XII, who was known as "the father of the people," and the animal figures often in the ornamentation of the Château of Blois. His successor in office, Francis I, took the salamander as badge, and in this château it also appears as part of the decoration.

The Flying Woman

THE courage of women has long ago ceased to be a subject of discussion, but, perhaps, nothing has shown this more clearly than their attitude to flying. The Duchess of Bedford might be thought to have reached an age at which record-breaking in so treacherous a medium as the air could, with no loss of prestige, be left to younger people; and her flight to India and back in a week simply leaves us breathless with admiration. It is not so long since we were, quite naturally, congratulating Sir Lyell Vyvyan on accomplishing that journey in twice the time. The Duchess of Bedford has created a new and striking record which is not likely to be easily broken.

But hers is not the first and perhaps not the most remarkable instance of woman's daring in the air. There are now numerous expert women pilots, numerous clubs which have more women applicants than men, numerous achievements in which women have shown themselv be unsurpassed in skill, in daring and in fortitude. Lady Heath's flight to a height of over four miles in a Moth and her lone journey from the Cape to Croydon will always win their own meed of praise. So, too, will that splendid 18,000-mile flight of Lady Balley. It is now taken to be normal to find women entrants for the King's Cup, and all three finished the race this year. One of them, Miss Spooner, is now taking part in the 4000-mile race round Europe in the International Airplane Challenge Competition. They have shown, indeed, that in this, as in other directions, there are not two standards of daring but one,
